"Grand Old Man of Virginia" in Serious Condition.

FORMER MEMBER OF CONGRESS

vention-Last Surviving Member of the Confederate Congress,

Special to The Washington Herald.

Norfolk, Va., July 3 .- John Goode, the "Grand Old Man of Virginia," former member of Congress, the last surviving member of the Confederate congress, president of the recent Virginia constitutional convention, and writer of law books, has suffered a stroke of paralysis at the home of his son-in-law, City Engineer William T. Brooke.

Mr. Goode is now in his eightles. For the past three or four years, he has done little or no active work on account of his advanced age. Years ago he was elected to Congress from the Norfolk district, and after retiring he maintained law offices in Washington and enjoyed a remunerative practice.

Of recent years Mr. Goode has made his home with his daughter, Mrs. Brooke, on Duke street.

Mr. Goode's last appearance in public as a member of the Virginia constitutional convention, and afterward made president of that body.

On account of Mr. Goode's advanced to St. Vincent's Hospital, where it was stated to-night he was a "little better." Practically no one is allowed to see him. His serious condition was not early made known to his friends, but when it became generally known this afternoon scores of inquiries were made as to his condition.
